

Mr Debnam

How much is your body worth?

Under NSW law, more than 90% of people injured by someone else, don't meet the test for fair compensation because of complex percentage thresholds.

The system is inconsistent, unfair and far too bureaucratic.
This all adds insult to injury. It's time to restore fairness and consistency.

Dear Mr Debnam

I am writing to you about the number of injured people in NSW who are missing out on fair compensation because of the harsh changes made to laws in this state.

The changes to motor accident compensation, workers' compensation and public liability laws went too far. It's as though the most important people – the injured – were forgotten when the laws were being debated.

Injured people in NSW are finding it increasingly difficult to claim fair and just compensation; compensation that could improve their quality of life.

The legal barriers to fair compensation in NSW are too harsh. They need to be changed.

Innocent victims of injuries are being hurt twice: first by their injuries and second by the system that has taken away their rights to fair compensation.

I would appreciate it if you could let me know your views on this very important issue.

Yours sincerely,
